Landscape & Largesse

International & Interdisciplinary Workshop

Our interdisciplinary workshop invites speakers from any field and aspires cross-disciplinary interaction with the aim of examining fundamental notions of socio-territorial belonging and inspiring novel forms of its imagination.

- What emancipatory/ liberating/ democratic potential may be found in the way the concept of landscape is treated?
- How does the notion of landscape allow us to include perspectives which overcome the monolithic (monocultural, monolingual) national ideal of community, and/or perspectives that include ideas like the common good and natural, non-human environments?
- How does the notion of landscape help us transform the notion of borders, particularly in the European context?
 - How can we elaborate on the emerging notion of “landscape citizenship”? What relationship between human beings, lived place, nature, community is hereby envisaged, and how does it relate to the rejuvenation of the notion of commons and common goods? Is there such a thing as a right to landscape?
- The notion of landscape is a visual, spatial and geographic reality, but, just as much, a linguistic, aural, and cultural entity. Which stated or unstated limits are questioned through a repositioning of its concept? How does it allow us to think new possibilities of (social and political) inclusivity?
 - How does the notion of landscape allow us to think the issue of migration and immigration in more socially salient and relevant terms?
